

LOCAL FIREMEN TO BE COMPENSATED

An ordinance providing compensation for the firemen of Daly City, in accordance with service rendered, was introduced at the meeting of the City Council on Monday evening and will come up for passage at the next regular meeting.

Under the terms of the ordinance $5,000 is to be set aside yearly for compensation for the firemen, and payments are to be made in accordance with the work done under the following schedule proposed by the board of Fire Commissioners:

- Covering in or grass fires, $1.
- Standing by for alarms outside of district, $1.
- Working on actual fire (7 A. M. to 10 P. M.) $1.50.
- Working on actual fire (12 P. M. to 7 A. M.), $2.50.
- If fire lasts over one hour, actual fire fighting per hour, extra, $1.50.
- Drills (limited to four per annum, for which payment will be made), $1.50.

Each regular member of the fire department is entitled to compensation, with the exception of the regularly paid employees of the city whose duty it is to respond to all fires as a part of their work.

Any money that may be left in this fund for the firemen at the end of the year shall be disbursed as follows: One hundred dollars to each of the six fire stations, and the balance, if any, then remaining in the fund shall be paid to each member of the fire department on the basis of the amount earned under the scale of payments provided in the ordinance.

A letter was received from the Fraternal Order of Eagles endorsing the plan for paying the firemen.

A letter was received from Colonel Skeggs, stating that the Unemployment Bureau at San Mateo, under Mr. Sam Merk, would handle the employment of men for the state highway construction in Daly City.

A resolution was adopted requesting that the new agency to take the place of the C. W. A. follow a plan similar to the C. W. A. program in providing both material and labor for projects, and also stating that under this plan the many Daly City projects as applied for could be started immediately, as all plans and estimates have been carefully prepared and are in the hands of the C. W. A. committee at San Mateo.

Copies of this resolution were ordered sent to the local and Washington Civil Works Administration, and to Congressman John J. McGrath and Senators Hiram W. Johnson and William G. McAdoo.

The Council instructed the City Attorney to make application to the Railroad Commission for public grade crossings at Westlake and Parkway avenues, that work on permanent paving of these streets may begin. The Southern Pacific takes the stand that these crossings are private crossings and that the action taken by the board is necessary before any work can be done on the railroad right-of-way.

YOUNG COUPLE UNITED IN PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Miss Dora Ellen Petersen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Petersen, of Frankfort street, became the bride of James Van Valkenburg at a pretty home wedding last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

The young couple were attended by the bride's sister, Mrs. Amelia Syme, as matron of honor, and Duke Dubitz, as best man. Rev. John Stevenson, of Grace Presbyterian church, performed the services.

After a delightful evening a buffet luncheon was served to the following guests: Mr. and Mrs. W. Petersen, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Petersen, Mr. and Mrs. Syme, Mr. and Mrs. Van Valkenburg, Mr. and Mrs. D. Dubitz and Mr. and Mrs. Markovich.

Mrs. Van Valkenburg has made her home in Daly City since her childhood. The young couple, who will make their home in Oakland, have the best wishes of their many local friends.

OWNER OF STILL SENTENCED TO THIRTY DAYS IN JAIL

Pete Peterson, of Shakespeare street, was indicted by the San Francisco grand jury on a charge of illegal possession of a still. He was finally sentenced to serve thirty days in the county jail in San Francisco, and pay a fine of $600.

A fire alarm was turned in from the Peterson residence on Friday, February 23, at 2:55 o'clock. Firemen and Chief of Police John T. Doyle and Officer James Reardon discovered the still, the overheated vent pipe of which had caused the fire. Peterson was arraigned before Commissioner E. E. Williams, in the Federal Court, February 28.

C. W. A. PROJECTS
TO BENEFIT CITY

Expenditure of $23,060.07 for four C. W. A. projects in San Mateo county has been approved by Edward Macauley, Federal Civil Works Administrator for California.

One of these is a new project, and two supplement previous allocations. One hundred and ninety-four men, according to Chief Engineer Frank W. Hibbs, will find work.

The Veterans' Administration building will be painted at a cost of $4,262.40. Twenty-two men are to be employed on the job.

Daly City will benefit by the excavation of a water storage reservoir and the construction of walls and a roof for the same, and the installation of 5,900 feet of cast iron pipe mains as part of the municipal water system. This will cost $11,260.67 and employ eighty-five men.

Clearing and extending the La Honda road will cost $3,188.50 and use the services of forty-four men.

Clearing the underbrush and small trees on the right-of-way for the same highway will cost $4,342.50.

MUSSEL HUNTER IS SWEEPED FROM ROCK

Joseph Los Chiavo, 40, of San Francisco, was drowned Sunday afternoon when washed from a rock at Lobitos Beach, just south of Half Moon Bay, while his wife and two children, unable to aid, screamed for help.

Los Chiavo was hunting for mussels when caught by an incoming wave which dashed him against a projection of the rock. He was knocked unconscious, witnesses said. About thirty picnickers summoned by calls of the family saw the doomed man swept to sea.

Coast guard speed boats from the Golden Gate and Fort Point stations searched the breakers for trace of the body. The Fort Point boat had just returned from rescuing three youths thrown into the water near Mile Rock light, San Francisco, when their canoe overturned. They were Roy Sonne, Ted Ziegler and Martin Moran, all of San Francisco.

Los Chiavo was on a picnic at Lobitos, five miles south of Half Moon Bay, with his wife, Mrs. Muniziatina Los Chiavo, and son, Anthony, and a daughter, Lydia, when the accident occurred. Mrs. Los Chiavo collapsed as she realized that Los Chiavo had been swept to his death.

NEWSPAPERS PLAY UP LOWER TAKE IDEA

By J. W. MARCHBANK

State-wide interest is manifest in my suggestion that the Legislature be asked next January to reduce the commission on pari-mutuel pools at race tracks from twelve to nine per cent. -Favorable reaction to my plan is shown in the press, in letters and by word of mouth. Live publications in various sections are reprinting these articles as they appear week after week.

A good deal is being written nowadays about breeding horses that can carry their speed over a distance of ground with scale weight up. Sprinters do not satisfy when it comes to furnishing the highest kind of thoroughbred contests. If Man o' War had not won at one mile and five furlongs, a true route for testing the stamina of the runner, the lustre of his name would not be anywhere nearly as bright as it is.

It is my aim at Heather Farm to produce horses possessing plenty of "foot" of course, but I am also striving for a type that can go on and win cup events.

The oldest of the progeny of my youngest stallion, Xenofol, are now yearlings, and judged from conformation and from that other important factor, blood lines, I believe I have a chance of breeding stayers. There is an abundance of stout strains on both sides of Xenofol's pedigree.

I am preparing for the day when California racing will be as notable as any in the country, not excepting New York, Maryland, Illinois and Florida.

LEGION AUXILIARY
BIRTHDAY PARTY

Daly City Unit No. 410, American Legion Auxiliary, will hold its regular meeting on Wednesday evening, March 21, in Legion Hall. This will be a grand celebration of their third birthday. Every member should be sure to attend and come in costume. A marvelous time is promised to all who come.

The Sewing Club will meet at the home of Margaret Miller next Monday afternoon.

On March 18 there will be an Americanism program given in the reception room of the Palo Alto hospital. It will be very interesting and all who can are urged to attend.

Community service is being given special attention during the month of March by all units in the Department of California. Daly City Unit is very much interested in the proposed school bonds.

The American Legion Auxiliary wishes to warn the public against so-called veteran salesmen. There are only three authorized veteran benefit sales—the annual Poppy sale in May by the American Legion Auxiliary and Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Forget-me-not sale in December by the Disabled American Veterans. These sales are given a great deal of publicity at the proper time. All other sales are illegal, and authorities should be notified. The money raised from these poppy sales is spent in our own community for relief work. Buy the Veteran made Poppy only.

Attorney Bennett met instant death at the wheel of his car in the accident. His wife, Emily, suffered a fractured skull and severe cuts and bruises, and Ernest Lackmann, also of Stockton, a passenger in the Bennett car, was cut.

Marshall Belch, of Imperial, driver of the truck, and Thomas Oliver, truck helper, escaped injury.

GOLD MINER HAS
SILVER AID PLANBy J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

Once in awhile a practical idea comes along that can be made use of by all of us. One of the best was advanced in the editorial columns of the Alaska Weekly. The editor of the publication up north did not claim credit for originating the notion, either, but gave the name of the miner whose brain child it was.

In a nutshell the proposition is to demand at least part of your change in silver when you break a five or ten. The miner, John Barrett, who owns valuable gold properties, spoke in this vein to the boss of the editorial sanctum.

"If every man in the country would demand silver in change instead of paper money, silver mines throughout the land would soon be going full blast. Instead of having a few pieces of paper in his pocket, every one should demand his change in silver and carry all he can conveniently handle."

The Seattle writer says to pass the idea along and that is just what we are doing. A lot of new coinage would be required if a hundred million people or more had the habit of asking for change, at least part of it, in the white metal.

Mining of gold and silver goes hand in hand; the prosperity of the one is dependent, to a large extent, on the prosperity of the other. Let's be united in battling for both.

Experts are saying the Meridian Mining Company's property promises to become one of the major gold producers of British Columbia. Recently a mining engineer of Seattle stated four ore zones of profitable ore have been opened up and that efficient management, competent engineering direction and a carefully considered program of development will undoubtedly bring success.

Gold Recoveries, Limited, in the Cariboo district, is also swinging into action with an aggressive development program. The company has sixteen mineral claims covering a total of 832 acres on Blue Nose Creek in the Quessal division of the Cariboo. The area was geologized by the Canadian government as long ago as 1888 and again in 1925.

The officials of the Askalta Oil Company, a concern that has gone into a gold mining venture, believe they have a promising prospect in the North Star group at Greenwood. The Vancouver Sun tells of the manager being in Vancouver purchasing drills and equipment for the work. The group, prior to the World War, was a shipper of gold ore and again in 1931 and in 1932, and the smelter returns showed an average of $49 in gold and $3.46 in silver.

Agitation for advancing the price of gold from $35 an ounce to $41.34 is attracting much attention outside of the United States. The possibility of action by the Federal Government is especially important to Canada, as such action at Washington, it is predicted, would cause the most intensive gold mining boom in all history, not only in the country of the origin of the order but in such contiguous territory as Canada. The figure—$41.34—is exactly double the price that ruled for a long time—$20.67.

It is pointed out that while there has been some improvement in commodity prices since the advance of the price of gold to $35, that it is logical to assume that a further advance would result in acceleration of the improvement.

Opinion is quite general revaluation of the dollar is the least painful method of redistributing wealth, which must be brought about if half the world is to be restored to normal living conditions.

Sidney Norman, who is doing brilliant work since taking up the duties of mining expert of the Vancouver Sun, said a few days ago:

"The ravages of the world's longest and deepest depression are being beaten back under the stimulation of the present added value of gold."

For more than a year I have been advocating the expansion of mining to defeat that old bogie, "depression," and it gives me a great thrill to think that I saw the light, a bit dimly at first, perhaps, of the method that would bring back happiness to our long suffering people.

Protest Eviction of Veterans

Cancellation of World war veterans' home purchase contracts was protested last Friday by Mayor A. R. Cotton and City Manager E. P. Wilsey of San Mateo in a letter to John P. Brennan, chairman of the Veterans Welfare Board. The San Mateo city officials in their communication asked Brennan to make a full investigation of each case before taking action.

DROWNED WHILE PLAYING PIRATE

Louis Armanio, 1016 Grand avenue, South San Francisco, a 10-year-old lad, went to his death last Saturday in a reservoir on the Restani ranch at Lawndale, while his playmates and ranchers made frantic efforts to rescue him.

The boy, clutching frantically for life, nearly dragged two of his playmates to a similar death.

Armanio was drowned when his raft broke apart in the middle of the reservoir. The raft was fashioned from loose timbers by Louis and his companions, who were playing in a game of "pirates." When Louis fell into the water the other two boys clung to the loose timbers till they were rescued by nearby ranchers. The limp body of the Armanio boy was recovered by a rancher.

As soon as Chief Joseph Cavalli, of Lawndale, found that after the use of the pulmotor no spark of life showed, he had the boy rushed to the South San Francisco Hospital, where he was pronounced dead upon arrival. An inquest was held last Tuesday afternoon at 2:45 o'clock at the Nieri undertaking establishment.

Louis was the son of Mrs. Palmara Gorgie, with whom he made his home. A sister, Rose, also survives him. He was born and raised in South San Francisco, where funeral services were conducted from the Nieri chapel at 8:45 last Monday. A mass was celebrated for the repose of his soul at All Souls church at 9 o'clock. Interment was in the Italian cemetery.

The United War Veterans' Council of San Mateo county will hold their monthly meeting in the Disabled American Veteran's hall in San Mateo tonight, Friday, March 16.

The executive board of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, met in Legion Hall, Monday, March 12. Plans were completed for the coming social dance to be held in the Happy-Go-Lucky Hall, Saturday, March 31, and for participating in the San Mateo County Council whist to be held in Redwood City Legion Hall, Saturday, March 24. The proceeds of this whist will go toward the County Council's convention expenses.

This lighthouse, six miles south of Pescadero on the Oceanshore Highway, was named Pigeon Point following the sensational wreck of the clipper ship "Carrier Pigeon."

The powerful lens of this light, originally in service on the coast of Maine, must feel very much at home as it looks on the nearby precipitous coastline. Legend has it that this lens was hidden in the sands of the South Atlantic Coast during the Civil War, to keep it from the hands of the Confederate forces.

The Oceanshore Highway from Pescadero to Santa Cruz leads directly through the U. S. Reservation at Pigeon Point.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

Note—This is a weekly report from the San Mateo County Department of Public Health and Welfare, giving facts of importance for health protection, and a list of contagious diseases reported to the County Health Officer in the previous week.

Whooping Cough Controlled

As previously stated in this column, whooping cough killed 1134 California children in the years 1928-1932, being exceeded in killing power only by tuberculosis and influenza. In children under one year of age, whooping cough stands first in both prevalence and killing power, with 701 deaths out of 4,546 cases reported in that age group.

Parents Are Responsible

The Weekly Bulletin of the California Department of Public Health, in the article previously referred to, sums up the problem of control as follows:

"It would appear, then, that whooping cough is of first importance as a killer of children under one year of age in California. If contact with active cases could be prevented this record might be made very much better. The responsibility rests largely upon parents. The health officer's most important duty lies in the instruction of parents in the dangers of this disease and the necessity for providing effective safeguards against its contraction."

Together, measles and Whooping cough constitute more than 60 per cent of all cases of communicable diseases reported in infants and together they are responsible for almost one-third of all deaths that occur in this age group."

Reporting is Vital

Whooping cough is very incompletely reported in San Mateo county, as it ranks sixth in the county as compared with third in the state as a whole. One of our cities reported only one case in five years. Nearly three times as many cases of tuberculosis as whooping cough are reported, which cannot represent true conditions. It is the legal and moral duty of every family head to report all cases of communicable diseases, such as whooping cough, to the local health officer. Suspected cases should be reported as such, and the patient isolated until the diagnosis is certain. Whooping cough is most infectious in the early stage, often before the "whoop" develops (some definite cases never whoop).

Protective Measures

Preventing contact of infants with anyone who may be infected is the best possible protection. In addition, whooping cough vaccine gives a large measure of protection, both for prevention and treatment. Ask your doctor.

MINING NOTES

The total output of silver in the United States in January was 2,025,000 fine ounces, the largest total since March of last year, when 2,574,000 ounces were produced. The rise during the month was 463,000 ounces. World production increased 11.5 per cent to an estimated total of 14,444,000 fine ounces.

More paid assays were made in the last six months of the year 1933 than ever before, says Paul Hopkins, government Analytical Chemist at College. Between July and December there were 935 custom assays made. But official assays ran lower because of the decreased Geological Survey investigations.

The revival of gold mining with increased buying by the government has already exceeded expectations in relieving the unemployment situation in California's mother lode country, according to J. C. Kemp Vanee, secretary of the Gold Mining Association of the United States. There was not a single idle man in Mariposa county, heart of the gold mining industry, last month, Vanee declared.

The Mining and Engineering Record of London, England's greatest mining publication, recommends to its readers investment in good silver and base metal shares. Better prices in such shares are overdue and 1934 may see an all-round improvement in values, the journal says.

Sourdoughs assembled at Los Angeles at the International Convention of the Sourdough Reunion voted to make President Franklin D. Roosevelt an honorary member of their organization and invite him to visit Alaska during his administration.

The Ketchikan district is being included in plans for geological survey increases, according to Dr. Phillip S. Smith, chief geologist for Alaska, who has gone to Washington, D. C., to attend to details of the work.

Sidney Norman, well known mining writer, has been appointed mining editor of the Vancouver Sun and has left Toronto to assume his new duties, which will cover an intensive effort to bring before Canadians and the world in general the great mining possibilities of the West Coast.

Jack Rice, pioneer resident of Juneau, one of the colorful characters of the capital city, is dead at the age of 77 years. Rice came North more than 40 years ago. For several years he was associated with his brother, George T. Rice, who had interests in Juneau, Skagway, Atlin and other places.

SAN QUENTIN PRISON BREAK IS THWARTED

After desperate hand to hand pistol and club fighting on the walls of San Quentin, a sensational prison break was thwarted last Monday with one prisoner dead and a guard and four other prisoners badly beaten. The escaping desperadoes, led by Ethan A. McNabb, notorious Oakland "yacht bandit," fought with pistols and bullets which they had made in their cells. The slain prisoner, accidentally shot by McNabb, was John Y. Arbuckle, San Bernardino bigamist.

ORDER BARRING MILK DRAWS FIRE OF BOARD

San Francisco's attitude toward milk pasteurized and inspected in this county, aroused the ire of the county board of supervisors, meeting in Redwood City, last Tuesday and reprisals were urged.

Recently San Francisco issued an order barring all milk not pasteurized in San Francisco from being sold or delivered there. This brought a strong protest from county milk dealers who demanded that the supervisors take steps to have the city change its stand. San Francisco did modify the order until such time as its health inspector could make a survey, but the issue came before the county board again on Tuesday.

Several of the supervisors favored the issuance of a similar order to that adopted by San Francisco, after hearing County Milk Inspector J. J. Garland report the milk of the county had a 96 per cent rating with the state health department. Garland reported also that the inspection tests of this county met state requirements. He said the milk produced in this county was of the best quality and properly handled.

Koshland will present the Captain to the large crowd, and following the affair the people will be given an opportunity of meeting Captain Macauley personally. C. V. Thompson, chairman of the board of supervisors, will also address the group. The new C. W. A. orchestra will furnish the music for the evening.

DO YOU suppose it's really, really true
That cats have got more lives than me and you?
So many, many times I've heard it said
A cat is hardly ever really dead

And even when it seems to be it's not.

QUICK MEAL FOR CHILLY EVENING

Fried Pineapple With Boiled Ham Is Tempting.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE menu of the quick meal is especially good for a chilly evening when we are hungry. After a brisk walk, there is nothing like a good hot soup, especially if it is onion soup, because it is so filling within itself.

I have omitted the usual vegetable of the main course. Instead we will serve with the broiled ham pineapple fried in the fat which remains after pan-broiling ham. I am rather fond of cooking ham in a pan rather than in a broiler. Of course, you must po r off some of the fat as it cooks, but it seems to me that the meat is less likely to be dry when it is cooked in this way, especially when you have the butcher cut it very thin.

Boiled rice will go very well with the ham. If you like you may stir in a little minced onion and the remaining bacon fat, or you may prefer it plain. Possibly you will like to make a gravy with the fat as a foundation and pour it around the rice when you serve it.

I am suggesting strawberry cake which you may prepare just before you serve it, or the night before. If you have time. If you want a still more elaborate dessert, you may serve it a la mode with vanilla ice cream. Instead of the fresh berries, canned fruit may be used for a dessert of this sort. Just be sure that the fruit is well mashed before you pour it over the cake. You may reserve a few whole berries or slices for a garnish.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

We were talking about the rescue of that yachting party off Barnegat when a gentleman, who has been doing a lot of proving about the waterfront lately, spoke up and announced that if anyone is interested in a yacht, now is the time to go shopping. Everywhere he went he encountered bargains. Yachts that cost many thousands are being offered for a song—with very few slingers. Naturally when the great financial blizzard struck, yachts were the first luxuries to be sacrificed since, according to all authorities, a steam yacht is the most expensive luxury known, being even more costly than a racing stable. Hence the bearish trend of the yacht market.

Many fine yachts were not put into commission last year and will not be this year. Several instances were cited of yachts that could be obtained for the accumulated storage charges.

Not knowing exactly what to do about the matter, he examined the souvenir of the law. The name of the officer who signed it seemed familiar. So he looked him up and discovered that he was his cousin. That led to what-a-small-world-this-really-is conversation—and the destruction of the ticket.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Why Do We Say 'Aborigines'?
THE sense of the word "aborigines" is probably known to everybody as a reference to the first dwellers in any land, that is, its earliest known inhabitants.

This, however, is a comparatively modern meaning. The word originally was applied to a particular central Italian tribe who were settled in Italy before the Roman period.

As might be expected, the word itself comes from the identical Latin "aborigine," meaning "from the beginning."

It is from this same source that, as might be surprised, we have the words "origin," "original," and others.

Turkey Is Giving Women Freedom of Street Cars

Istanbul.—The last outward sign of the old regime which sheltered women from public view in Turkey will disappear shortly when the municipality gives definite expression to the resolution to abolish the two rows of seats in the street cars reserved for women.

The assignment of special seats to Turkish women on ships and trains originally aimed at the seclusion of Mussulman women from the other sex. Heavy curtains in the street cars have separated the two first rows from the rest for that purpose. After the reform this separation was suppressed both on ships and railways, having lost its raison d'etre, but it has persisted on the street cars, where the special seats remained even after the curtains had been removed.

Dammed Waters to Cover Site of Old Ohio Town

Ashtabula, Ohio.—Nothing but the memory of Croytown, one of Ashtabula county's oldest settlements, will remain in a few months.

The site of the town will be covered by the rising waters of the vast Pymatuning reservoir whose dam, now being built, will flood parts of counties in both Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Buildings in the village have already been razed for the inundation. The town in its heyday boasted a woolen mill, blacksmith shop, shoe shop, harness shop, a general store and several homes.

Fifty Famous Frontiersmen

Rising Wolf, White Blackfoot

THE blood of French nobility and of English aristocracy flowed in his veins. He was fair-haired and blue-eyed and white-skinned, but to this day he is revered among the Blackfoot Indians as "Rising Wolf," one of their own greatest and best-loved. Hugh Monroe was his name and he was born at Three Rivers, Quebec, in 1798, the son of Capt. Hugh Monroe of the British army in Canada and Amelie de la Roche, daughter of a noble family of French emigres.

When but sixteen years of age he persuaded his parents to let him enter the service of the Hudson's Bay company, the lords of the empire of fur, and that spring he started west with a flotilla of their canoes. The next year he was at Mountain Post on the Saskatchewan. Around the fort were camped thousands of Blackfeet, come there to trade for the white man's goods. But as yet the company had no Blackfeet interpreter and the H. B. C. factor at the post, impressed with the intelligence of young Monroe, detailed him to live and travel with the Pikuni (Piegan) tribe of the Blackfeet until he should learn their language and be able to influence them to return to Mountain Post each year to do their trading.

Young Monroe succeeded beyond the wildest hopes of the H. B. C. factor. The first thing he did, quite by chance, made a deep impression upon the Indians. He lighted the medicine man's pipe of tobacco by holding a burning glass, concealed in his hand, over it and the Blackfeet, awe-stricken by his apparent link with their great deity, the sun, thereafter regarded him as "great medicine." Later he strengthened the bond by marrying Sinokapi, or Fox Woman, the daughter of Lone Walker, a great chief of the Pikuni.

During his long years with the Hudson's Bay company and later with the American Fur company, for which he became post hunter at Fort Benton in Montana and as a free trapper, Monroe extended his influence over the Blackfeet to other tribes as well until he was probably the best-known and best-liked white man among the tribes of the Northern Plains.

Rising Wolf and Fox Woman were the parents of two sons and two daughters John, Francois, Lizzie and Amelia. The latter married Thomas Jackson, a Virginian, and they had two sons, Robert and William Jackson. Monroe had a great deal to do with the training of these two grandsons who became noted as scouts for Gen. George A. Custer and Gen. Nelson A. Miles in the Sioux war of 1876-77.

"The Father of Oklahoma"

CONSIDER the paradox of Capt. David L. Payne. He was the "father of Oklahoma," yet he was a native of Indiana; he was given his first name because of an event which took place in far-away Texas; he died and is buried in Kansas, which state has steadfastly resisted attempts to remove his body to Oklahoma; and the latter state has given him no official recognition beyond naming one of its original counties after him.

Born in Fairmont, Ind., December 30, 1836, his mother, who was a first cousin of Davy Crockett, named him David in honor of the frontier-reliantive who had died gloriously at the fall of the Alamo a few months before. At the age of twenty-one Payne moved to Kansas and took up a claim near Atchison. He served in the Civil war in the Fourth Kansas regiment until 1863 when he was discharged. Then he became a member of the state legislature and postmaster at Fort Leavenworth.

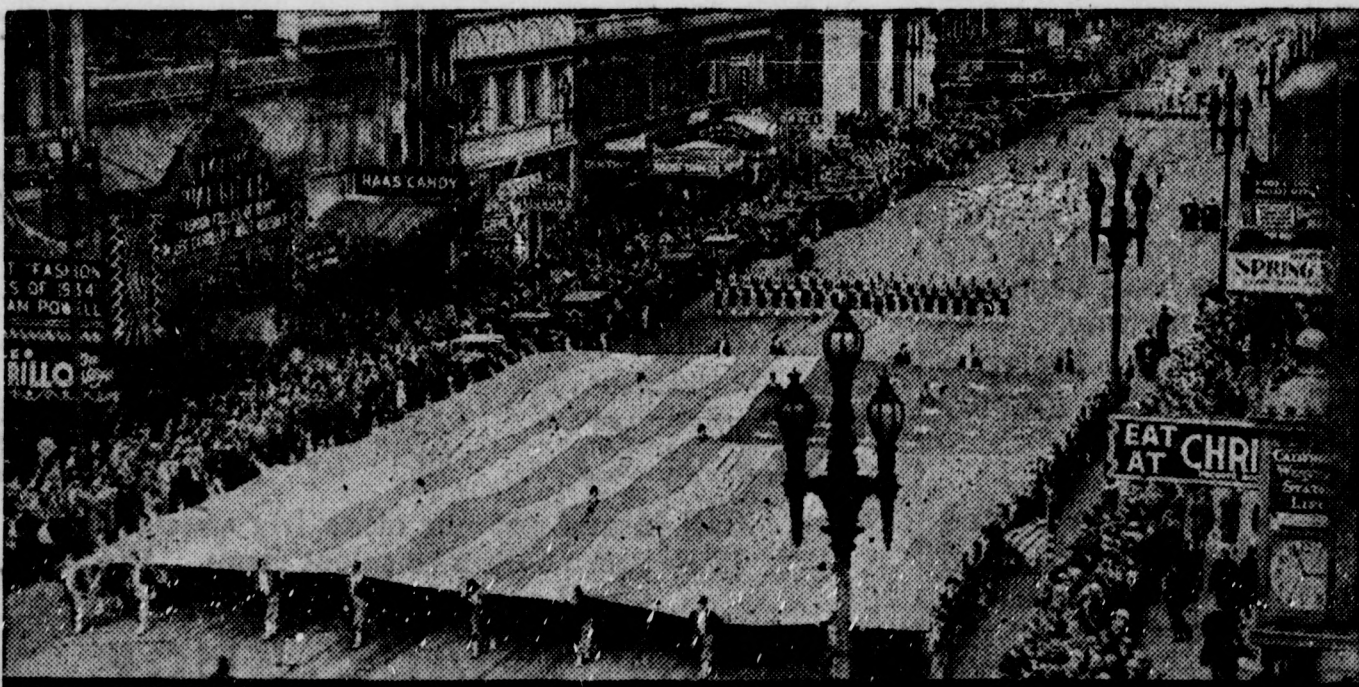

In 1867 he was elected captain of a Kansas cavalry troop formed to fight the Indians and campaigned actively in the western part of the state. During the next two years he served with Gen. George A. Custer and his Seventh cavalry and, as the boon companion of the famous California Joe and actor in many a half-breed escape from death, won great renown as the "Scout of the Cimarron."

The year 1870 found him back in politics again, as a member of the state legislature of Kansas, as an unsuccessful candidate for the state senate in 1872 and finally as doorkeeper of the house of representatives in Washington where he remained until 1879. During his service as a scout for Custer, Payne had seen for himself the richness of the land in Oklahoma and in Washington he made the discovery, as he believed, that the lands in the western part of Indian territory, which had been ceded by the Creek Indians to the government for occupation by the other Civilized Tribes and by freedmen, in reality belonged to the public lands of the United States.

So Payne became the first "Oklahoma boomer" and the leader of no less than six of the eight expeditions of homeseekers, all of which tried to settle there and were expelled from the disputed territory by federal troops. Payne died suddenly in Wellington, Kan., November 27, 1884—"poisoned by his enemies," so his friends declare—five years too soon to see the realization of his dream of "the home of the red man" opened to white settlement.

THE AIR MAIL CONTROVERSY

Opposite views are expressed as to the action of the President in the air mail controversy. The guilt or innocence of the air mail contractors now meets with little discussion. The public, it would seem, is content with the Presidents' judgment on that issue. The Postmaster General's charges of fraud and collusion in their inception, which apparently was reviewed and approved by the President, were accepted at their face value and deemed a justification of the abandonment of the contracts. Some, however, believe that he made a tactical error in turning air mail transportation back to the Army fliers, particularly since several have met tragic deaths. Others say that sufficient thought was not given to the public importance of the service and the necessity of an adequate and competent substitute for the facilities and personnel employed in its execution.

However, it is an ill wind that blows no one good. Unexpected as the act of the President was, the Army has struggled manfully and patriotically against great odds. Its air personnel has suffered severe loss, but, it is hoped, not in vain. It is only too evident that its equipment is not what it should be, and that its training system is too restricted. The country should and undoubtedly will demand immediate correction of these weaknesses. The safety of the nation demands it.

The administration announced that many of the commercial fliers would be taken over as soon as Congress passes pending bills introduced for that purpose. It is also stated that the Army planes will be equipped with radio and blind flying instruments. Pending the placement of such equipment, only the safer mail routes should be flown, it is suggested.

A GEORGIA MOTHER

While she probably has not broken any world record, the achievement of Mrs. M. F. Smith, of Atlanta, who recently bore her eighteenth child at the age of 38, is worthy of more than passing notice. She was married at 13, and her eldest daughter is 23. There were no twins or triplets in the family, and of the nine boys and nine girls, fifteen are living, and there are four grandchildren. Mrs. Smith's record would have delighted the late President Theodore Roosevelt, staunch believer in big families, and might be viewed with dismay by Mrs. Margaret Sanger, militant advocate of birth control.

Unfortunately the speaker who lays his watch on the table forgets to look at it again.

THE GO-GETTERS

Much of the literature addressed to youth is surcharged with advice as to how to become successful in life. And by "successful" is generally meant "prominent" or "wealth," or both. Mere comfort or happiness appears to have little place in the popular idea of success.

Particularly in picturing the glories of the business career do our success authorities and efficiency experts stress the virtues of aggressiveness, enterprise and other qualities generally comprehended by the word "push." One ideal held up to the young man is the high-powered salesman, who if he has nothing else to sell must "sell himself" to some eager employer at a princely salary, made possible by a short correspondence course to develop "personality."

But a few thoughtful persons here and there have begun to rebel against this everlasting preaching and practice of "push." They are getting weary of the ballyhoo of the boosters, and the eternal striving to get ahead of one's neighbor. It is a good sign that a few recent writers have sensed the futility of it all and have begun to tell us how ridiculous it is.

Legitimate efforts to attain a competency and comfort are most commendable, but the blatant go-getter, who subordinates all the finer things of life to money-grubbing and social climbing is getting tiresome. In his own shallow conceit he may imagine that he is a success, but to those who have a real appreciation of values he is a rather dismal failure.

ELECTRICAL PROGRESS

Sufficient evidence of progress is seen in new ideas and improved equipment which have been applied to power stations, whereby the cost of generating electricity by steam plants has been brought below four mills per kilowatt hour in some instances, with even greater economies promised for the near future.

This increased efficiency of steam plants will have a most important bearing upon the future value of water-power projects, because only those power dams which are most advantageously located will be able to produce electricity at a cost less than that of generation by steam.

A survey by the National Industrial Conference Board shows that the use of electrical power in manufacturing has trebled during the last ten years and now totals about twenty-six million horsepower, or 73 per cent of all the power so used.

What the total electrical output will be in another ten years must be left largely to the imagination. Electrification of farms and railroads is in its infancy, but is going forward rapidly. New electrical appliances for every conceivable means of utility, comfort and entertainment are being developed with amazing rapidity.

In fact we are just beginning to get some slight idea of what electricity will mean to civilization of the future.

RISE OF CARBON BLACK

Do you know that ten per cent of the weight of your automobile tires is composed of carbon black? Such is the case, according to a report by the Bureau of Mines, which tells of the remarkable growth of the carbon black industry. Carbon black is a fluffy, velvety, black pigment made by burning natural gas with insufficient air. Until about fifteen years ago it was used chiefly in the manufacture of printing ink and the output required was comparatively small. But in 1915 it was discovered that by combining carbon black with rubber the tensile strength of the rubber was much increased, adding greatly to its life when used in automobile tires.

After this discovery the use of carbon black increased with amazing rapidity, until now there are about sixty plants for its manufacture in the United States, with a total of nearly 200,000,000 pounds a year.

While carbon black is used extensively as a pigment in inks and paints, in stove polish, crayons and a variety of other articles, fully two-thirds of the output goes into automobile tires.

Thus the development of another important industry has been brought about through the marvelous expansion of the automobile trade.

PROPHETIC BUNK

About the first of every year quite a number of soothsayers, prophets, seers, or whatever they call themselves, get several columns of their predictions into print. Some folks apparently take this foolishness seriously, as superstition still has a strong hold upon a large percentage of people, even in this enlightened age.

It is an occasional custom of the Pathfinder to check up on previous predictions, which inevitably results in making the alleged prophets ridiculous. Not long ago that weekly reviewed the prophecies of Belle Bart, Madam Marcia, Professor Raymond, Genevieve Kemble, Arthur Brooks and others, not one of whose specific predictions came true.

We also have the crack-brained religious fanatics who pretend to read the future and see the end of the world foretold in Revelations. Many dates have been set, but the old world persists in spinning on its way.

The strange thing is that many persons, otherwise apparently sound of mind, worry over these gloomy prophecies which are never fulfilled.

Only one enlisted man in active service in the United States Army is now entitled to wear the Congressional Medal of Honor, the highest American military decoration. He is Master Sergeant Lloyd M. Seibert, of the Sixth Cavalry, stationed at Fort Knox, Kentucky. This decoration, authorized by Congress in 1862, is considered equivalent to the famed Victoria Cross of England and the Iron Cross of Prussia.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

While admitting that "the maze of conflicting standards, impulses and interest" of the present day are at times bewildering to the younger generation, Miss Katherine Lenroot of the Children's Bureau declares that on the whole children are no worse than their parents were during childhood.

She calls attention to the new agencies for steadying boys and girls of the teen age, mentioning the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Campfire Girls, each of which has a beneficial influence.

Miss Lenroot believes that more comforts of life, better educational opportunities, greater frankness in facing problems of sex, and other conditions of the present furnish a better basis for character development than was known by previous generations.

In cities and communities where statistics are available there has been a marked falling off in juvenile delinquency during the past ten years, and there has been no increase in the more serious offences, if population be considered. Miss Lenroot points out that each generation of adults, from the earliest times to the present, has deplored the wildness of youth, and wondered what the world was coming to. She adds that those in a position to observe actual conditions do not share the apprehensions of the alarmists.

Coming from one who views the subject from an exceptional point of vantage, the conclusions expressed by Miss Lenroot are reassuring.

The increasing number of women diplomats presages the end of secret diplomacy, says a woman-hater.

It takes jacks or better to open a jackpot or a railroad car window.

NUMBER OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES DECREASE

"In 1911 the Western railroads had 631,104 employees, while in 1920 they had 778,590, an increase of 147,486, or 23.4 per cent, but since 1920 the number employed has gradually decreased until in 1932 they numbered but 573,364, a total decrease since 1920 of 405,226, or 52 per cent," said C. D. Morris, assistant to the chairman of the Western Railways' committee on public relations, Chicago, in an address before the Kiwanis Club at Anaconda, Montana, on March 8. "Between 1920 and 1932, while the number of railway employees in the West decreased 52 per cent, the number in the East and South decreased but 47.1 per cent."

"Look at this matter also from the standpoint of wages paid. In 1911 the Western railroads paid their employees aggregate wages of $457,104,180, while in 1920 they paid them a total of $1,386,250,307, an increase of $919,146,127, or 203.3 per cent. Aggregate railway wages in Western territory decreased after 1920 until in 1932 they amounted to but $563,179,577, a reduction of 59.4 per cent. Total wages paid by the Western roads in 1932 were but 23.2 per cent more than they paid in 1911, while the aggregate wages paid by the Eastern and Southern roads in 1932 were 33.6 per cent larger than in 1911."

Average Electric Rates Are Steadily Declining

Average electric rates have been declining since 1929, according to figures recently released by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company.

The average rate paid by domestic consumers in the P. G. and E. territory in 1932 was 4.40 cents per kilowatt hour, which was 1.18 cents lower than the national average of 5.58 cents. A compilation of rates for the entire country shows that home users of electricity paid an average of 6.33 cents per kilowatt hour in 1929, and that the figure dropped to 5.58, a reduction of 1.05 cents per kilowatt hour, in 1932.

During the four years from 1929 to 1932, domestic consumers enjoyed a cumulative saving throughout the United States of more than $154,000,000.

During the fifty-six months from 1929 to September 1, 1933, rate reductions for electric service for all purposes, including domestic, commercial and industrial uses, effected a cumulative saving to consumers of $370,000,000.

FACTS ABOUT THE TELEPHONE

The desk telephone first came into use at subscribers' stations in 1886. Radio telephone communication between France and Algeria was established recently.

The daily average of telephone calls in the Greater Boston district is about 2,000,000, but during a severe storm this past winter there was a 50 per cent increase, bringing the daily average up to more than 3,000,000.

As Bell System telephone service is practically world-wide, so, too, is the distribution of stockholders of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the parent company of the System. These stockholders are located in every state in the Union and in every important foreign country except Russia.

The total number of people living in the world on January 1, 1933, was 2,040,000,000, according to an estimate recently completed by the statistical department of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The number of telephones in service in the world on the same date figures up to approximately 33,400,000. Consequently, there is an average of one telephone for every sixty-one persons in the world.

SYNOPSIS

At a dance, a visitor in the community, Neal Conrad, young lawyer, is impressed by Anne Chamberlain, pretty daughter of a shiftless farmer, perceiving her fine character. A few days later she accompanies him and his hostess, Mrs. Griffin, on a picnic. At the end of the day Neal declares his love. At Washington, on their honeymoon, the Conrads meet Clarence Hathaway, friend of Neal's, young diplomat. The young couple start housekeeping. Anne's health begins to fail. Neal, engrossed in politics, becomes neglectful of her happiness. Their son is born. In the ensuing eight years Neal's law practice and his position in politics both mount. A daughter has been born to Anne, but her beauty is fading. Clarence Hathaway visits the Conrads. He reproaches Neal for allowing Anne to "stagnate," and suggests Neal and Anne take a holiday, with him, in France. In Paris Anne is "rejuvenated," physically and sartorially. Hathaway, long secretly enamored, endeavors to win her from Neal, without success. The governor of his state offers Neal the appointment of senator in the United States senate.

At the hands of the newspapers she fared even worse. The society editors, like the photographers, had telephoned her; like the photographers, she had put them off. She could not bear the thoughts of giving interviews. But Miss Sharp, of the Evening Inquirer, decided to present herself at the new senator's residence, and take her chances on being rebuffed, even though she went without an appointment. Her ring at the doorbell remained unanswered; and she turned for help to a young woman, her head enveloped in a mobcap, who was vigorously washing windows.

"Can you tell me whether Mrs. Conrad is at home?" she asked.

The window-washer wrung out her cloth from the pail of steaming suds by her side, and turned her head half-way around.

"I am Mrs. Conrad," she replied calmly, and went on washing windows.

Miss Sharp fled; but as she fled, she thought, and thought rapidly. Before the sun had gone down, Anne had been surreptitiously photographed in the act of washing her last window; and the following evening, this distorted likeness of herself, together with the heavy headline, "Senator's Wife Acts as Own Scrubwoman" surmounted two columns, more conspicuous for their imagination than their accuracy, on the front page of the Inquirer. This was such good "copy" that it was, of course, copied—from one end of the United States to the other. Reporters were sent to Hamstead and to Hinsboro, to dig up forgotten or unknown facts or fancies about the new senator's wife. Photographs of "Pupper and Mummer" with Sol and Sam on the front porch between them adorned the Sunday supplements. Anne was delineated bending over the washtub and milking the family cow. Had Neal been a candidate for the Presidency no sort of publicity could have been more helpful; since he was instead an appointee to the senate, none could have been more disastrous.

By the time the nine days' excitement had subsided somewhat, the housecleaning was finished, groceries and coal had been installed, and Anne had gone to Hinsboro to help Dora finish closing the house there, and bring the maid and the children back with her to Washington.

Then Anne's daily round of work began. After an early breakfast, she walked over to the garage—the nearest one they had been able to find was several blocks away—and got the car, while Neal read the morning paper, for it was, of course, important that he should keep himself thoroughly informed about current events. By the time she had taken the children to school he was, however, ready to have her take him to the senate office building; and after she had left him there, she did the marketing, for the "cash and carry" stores were much cheaper than the ones that "delivered." Back at the little yellow brick house, the chamberwork awaited her, for Dora had agreed to take care of the furnace if Anne would do this. In no time, the hands of the clock were pointing to the hour at which she must go and get the children; steer them through their luncheon, plan for their afternoon outing. Then there were the simple home lessons with which they needed help, preparation for Sunday school on Saturday night, dancing school to dress them for and take them to Saturday morning. There was supper to get for all of them on Dora's night out—a hearty supper, for Neal had quickly fallen into the way of taking a very light lunch, and came home hungry.

Anne found herself standing beside her bed at night pressing her hands against her throbbing temples, as if by this pressure she could push back the pressing duties which drove her forward. She was tired all the time, tired as she had not been since the days when Nancy was a delicate baby and Junior an exacting three-year-old and she had been obliged, at the doctor's orders, to engage Dora and cease doing all her own work. She was continually hurried and hurried; her driving weariness threatened to annihilate her. For, as she soon discovered, the demands made upon her time and strength by her home and family were as nothing compared to the outside demands made upon her in her official position as a senator's wife.

Anne had settled herself with an overflowing mending basket before the living room fire one rainy afternoon, comfortably conscious that she had an hour or more to herself before it would be time to go for Neal—though after that there would still be supper to get, for this was Dora's day out. She had on a rather shabby little serge house dress, because she found it easier, with running the car so much, to slip a big coat over such a dress, than to keep changing all the time to her smart Parisian tailleur. She knew, of course she knew, that she ought to put on something more suitable for afternoon, but it hardly seemed worth while, when she must go out again so soon in that driving rain. Her shoes, too, she realized, glancing down at them, were getting shabby with all this driving. She mustn't let herself get careless, get shoddy again, after all she had learned in Paris. But—oh, well—she picked up her fourth sock.

The doorbell rang. She went to the front door and flung it open.

Two very elegant ladies confronted her. They had on dark velvet dresses, rich furs and white gloves, and their satin slippers were smooth and narrow. Behind them, at the curb, stood a shiny limousine with a man in livery at the wheel.

"Is Mrs. Conrad receiving today?" they asked simultaneously, in shrill,

"Can You Tell Me Whether Mrs. Conrad Is at Home?"

high voices. And as they did so, they each extended three cards, two little ones and one large one.

Mechanically, Anne reached behind her for the silver card tray that reposed on the hall table, and set it down again, the cards fluttering over the edge, before she answered. Then, in spite of her bewilderment, she spoke cordially.

"Won't you come in? I'm Mrs. Conrad. . . . I think you'll find these chairs, here by the fire, comfortable." "Oh, thank you. We didn't know whether you'd have begun your Thursdays yet or not, it's so early in the season. And it's early in the afternoon, too, of course we know that. But perhaps you weren't quite ready to begin receiving, Mrs. Conrad? You must excuse us, but we've been so anxious to meet the new senator's wife. I'm Mrs. Roper and this is my friend Mrs. Ranger. We always make our calls together, we're such friends."

Anne's head was whirling. Her Thursdays? Mrs. Roper and Mrs. Ranger? She groped towards a light which she could not find, and her visitors were instantly aware of the fact.

"Of course you knew, Mrs. Conrad, that senator's wives receive on Thursdays? The Supreme court ladies on Mondays, the congressional ladies on Tuesdays, the cabinet ladies on Wednesdays, the senatorial ladies on Thursdays, the diplomatic ladies on Fridays—that leaves Saturdays and Sundays for the resident society, the cave-dwellers, you know. But of course I don't need to tell you all this! How are you getting on with your own visits?"

"My own visits?" gasped Anne, thinking of the windows she had washed and the floors she had scrubbed and all the other pushing, daily duties which made her press her hands against her temples at night, they harried her so. Visits indeed!

"Of course you've called promptly on all your superiors in rank—it's so important to do that at once. It creates quite a wrong impression if you don't. Well, next week we shall expect to see you, dear Mrs. Conrad. We always receive together, we're such friends. Of course you've heard how intimate we are."

They rose, shook hands, and hurried away with staccato exclamations about ten more calls to make. The front door closed behind them, but Anne could hear them talking as they went down the steps.

"My dear, did you ever? I do believe all those stories about the cow and the washtub and everything are true, don't you? No tea and no one to open the door, and those shabby clothes, what did she do in Paris, do you suppose, go to art-galleries? And it's evident she doesn't know a thing about what's expected of her. . . . Oh, Madame Estavi, are you coming to call on Mrs. Conrad, too? Yes, we've just been. Yes, she's in."

Chic Prints Stress Simple Styling

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HAVE you noticed how remarkably simple is the styling of the new print frocks? One almost gasps at their simplicity—straight narrow skirt, top part frequently in shirtwaist fashion or made ostensibly plain with sleeves which are either three-quarter or full length, often quite full at the armhole or that which is newest of all, fairly close-fitting from shoulder to wrist.

Well now, this glaring simplicity is not a mere happenstance. Rather is it a deliberate move on the part of designers to create along lines that are different. With all their seeming simplicity there is something about these new print frocks which bespeaks the very quintessence of high fashion.

Of course the prints themselves are as new, as new-looking as can be both in motif and coloring. So much so that a last year's print sadly looks it by the side of a today's patterning and weave. For example, there's the new necktie prints such as the one which fashions the very good-looking dress to the left in the picture. To be clad in a frock of necktie print silk during the daytime hours is to declare yourself style-conscious to the last degree. This model is designed for immediate wear under one's winter coat. It plays up the idea of simplicity with consummate art. Note the dropped shoulderline, the scarf of self-print, the slim gored skirt and that which is of greatest significance, the new three-quarter sleeve.

One of the joys of gay springtime is the stepping out in new and fashionable footwear, which is why we are especially calling attention to the smart black kid opera pumps which milady of the necktie-print frock is wearing. These pumps have a beautifully designed simple arrow motif at the side—just that touch which carries them out of the rank and file. The hat which tops this chic outfit is black felt smartly banded with white.

The point about the print centered in the picture is that it has a navy background. The flowers are in tones of mulberry and white. Seeing that fashion has gone into "the navy" so wholeheartedly this spring, navy accessories are inevitable and so with this captivating spring frock accents of this color very modishly appear in hat, girdle and a chic pair of navy blue kid strap pumps with circular motifs piped in contrasting white.

The thing you are bound to remember about the print dress on the seated figure is that it is smocked at neckline and sleeves. As a trimming treatment for prints here is real news. It is our prophesy that you will be thinking so excitedly over this idea you will resolve at once that it is exactly what you will do with the print frock you are going to make up in the near future—smock it! You'll love the color scheme of this print in the picture, too. It's tango red and beige. Sounds intriguing, does it not?

Briefly we would call your attention to the new sheer wool prints and the mossy crepe prints and the handsome bordered prints all of which are headliners on the spring fabric program.

TWO-COLOR DRESSES AGAIN FIND FAVOR

The two-color frock—once a high favorite but lately almost banished from the scene—is staging a fashion comeback.

Though far from holding the spotlight, it is beginning to be seen again in women's spring wardrobes.

Sometimes it appears in a frock which has a dropped shoulder yoke of one color and the body of the dress in another.

Again it is seen in a model whose sleeves contrast with that of the frock, or a trim little dress that has a deep yoke of a contrasting hue.

And there are other variations of the vogue for two colors.

Lavin puts cherry-red satin sleeves in a black afternoon frock and adds elbow bracelets of the same bright red satin.

She designs a black wool frock with frilled epaulets, sleeves and small collar of apple-green satin and puts a deep U-shaped white yoke on a black wool frock to give a contrasting touch.

Tweed Good, Serviceable Fabric for Spring Wear

Another tweed season lies ahead. Once one has acquired the hardy habit of tweed it is impossible to give it up. If one wants durability, and a general all-around good fabric friend, it is tweed, and now that weavers have become imaginative in color schemes, one's interest in tweeds is at fever heat.

Don't forget that tweeds are not alone used by tailors, but by dress-makers. Not only coats and suits are made of it, but separate skirts, and very trim looking as well.

The tweed hat and scarf combinations are popular, although a preference is felt hats with tweed.

Inflammable Gown

One of the most novel dresses for spring combines silk and straw. It is highly inflammable, therefore impractical, but it is a sensation.

HOOD COLLAR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's the latest—the hood collar which drops the fur to the back. As the season advances you will be seeing all sorts of hood-shaped collars and capelets. Many of them are made detachable, as for instance perfectly stunning hood-capelets of fur-bordered velvet designed to be worn with your new spring suit or cloth street frock. Charming will they also prove later on to wear with summery print frocks and afternoon crepes. Note that the body of the coat pictured is more fitted as to waist and more rippled as to skirt than in the winter models.

SOMEONE'S DEAREST CARY

By COSMO HAMILTON

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service

THE cigarette case with which he had been playing was a gold one, battered and none too clean. It might have been used as a missile in moments of boredom during such a tea party as this one, for instance, but undoubtedly it was gold. Apart from the dents which gave it a history of carelessness or temper it was dedicated in a man's handwriting to "Dearest Cary—with everlasting love." It was this engraved inscription, so amazingly indiscreet, which made Balfour turn to the girl on his left. Balfour was given to playing hermit in his stronghold on the hill; his somewhat infrequent novels were numbered among events. Tall, thin, grayish, immaculate, unmarried, he was as aloof as a cuckoo, but when he came forth, bland, patient and heroic, he played the social game with ability, and hoped, in spite of cynicism, for a little fun. It was his hobby to laugh.

"Are you Cary?" he asked.

"Yes, worse luck," she said.

She was pretty, with splendid shoulders, thoroughbred, or, as it amused him to put it, gold. Somewhat battered, however, he was bound to confess, like the case. She, too, had the appearance of one who had been used, or had used herself, as a missile, because her edges had been dented and there was irony round her mouth. It was a pity and he was sorry. His psychological eye read quite easily in her face and in her nicotine-stained fingers and slightly out-of-date frock a history as dented as the cigarette case which had been pushed beneath his hand.

"Why worse luck?" he asked. She would lie as all girls lied, and every woman, according to her creed.

"Because I hate myself," she said simply. "However, would you like to buy a cigarette case? It's gold. You can have the dents pushed out."

"Buy it? But what would the man say who wrote 'Dearest Cary—with everlasting love'?"

"He wouldn't know," she said. "He works in Shanghai, you see. I intended to go to town to hock the poor little thing. I can raise enough money on it to buy the only things which keep me from taking rat poison—cigarettes, I mean."

"You're lying, my child," he said.

"I never lie," she answered. "That's why not a single soul believes a word I say. I've pushed this thing under your hand so that you might ask me about it and having heard the truth play the gallant person and save me going to town."

He considered that some one's dearest Cary was dramatizing herself, was using her cigarette case for the purpose of achieving limelight. However, there were the possibilities of amusement in all this. He might add another laugh to his collection, which was good. "How much do you want?" he asked.

"Five dollars is the usual sum," she said.

"If you will throw in the dents and tell me what put them there I'll double the price—though I shan't believe a word."

Upon which, quite briefly, she told him that she was engaged to be married to a Harvard man who worked in Shanghai for his firm. There was everlasting love on both sides, but she was twenty-seven, and there was no hope of their marriage because his salary was low. Her father and mother were dead and for several years she had been living with a disagreeable aunt. "Like Micawber I am hanging about waiting for something to turn up, afraid to take the bull by the horns and strike out for myself—which answers the unpleasant questions I can see in the back of your eyes. . . . If you would rather that a poor but honest girl who is badly up against it continues to grace this world why not give me a job? In fact—and this is a brain-wave. . . ."

"I thought that was coming," said Balfour. "But I have a secretary, as it happens, a very capable girl."

"How long has she been with you?"

"Five years next Christmas," he said.

"Ah. Then I should think she's about fed up. It must be terribly monotonous to have been with you so long. I think that lets me in. Put me next on your list. I will take up stenography and typewriting tomorrow and work like a little dog and report at the turn of the year. I know the name of your house here. It's very nice, I'm told."

Balfour laughed it off. He put this girl down as an exhibitionist and dismissed her from his mind. But he kept the case as a memento with its very numerous dents. After all, it was gold.

For five years, with an annual holiday which she made too short, Balfour's capable secretary had kept the lamp of loyalty blazing on his roof. The tumult in her soul which had been caused by her love for this aloof, distinguished man had gradually died away. So that Doris Minton was a very happy girl. Except, that is, for the haunting fear that one day he would announce his engagement to some impossible person who would ruin the rest of his life. Just at the moment, however, when the sky was even more cloudless than it had ever been, dearest Cary made an energetic entrance into that house on the hill. She was carrying a portable typewriter in one hand, a vanity case in the other and was followed by a taxi driver bearing several bags. Hearing a cheery "Hullo" followed by "Here I am," Doris became covered with goose-flesh and stood frozen to the floor.

"Don't we shake hands?" asked Cary, extremely proud of herself. "I said I'd be here and I am here, exactly at the turn of the year. How soon can we get to work?"

Balfour remembered her and was bound to confess, and gladly, that if ever he had seen a girl in her second blooming he saw her in dearest Cary who belonged to the man in Shanghai. "This is going to be the most awkward thing," he said, "that has ever happened to me." But the sentiment in his nature drove the cynicism out. "I can see that this means at least twice as much work for me. Miss Minton in the morning and you in the afternoon. But I think that you had better meet as infrequently as you can."

"Perfectly fine," she said.

Doris and dearest Cary remained on speaking terms—and what could be worse than that? They spoke to each other in cutting words and hurled metaphorical bombs. Balfour's life, like that of a traffic policeman, was a far from happy one. He commenced that curious practice, before the end of a month, of concocting imaginary telegrams which should call him to New York. Some one had got to die. His house was no longer a home. It was a front-line trench. And yet, as the book had to be finished by a certain date, what was he to do? Should he beat a quick retreat, engage another secretary and continue to work in New York? Or might he get out of this trouble by an offer of marriage to one of the girls and the retention of the other to type? There was a huge dent in his case—especially when he discovered that he was deeply in love with Cary, who was undoubtedly gold. It was on the tip of his tongue to say to her, "I find that I'm in love for the first time in my life. I'm ready to drop my selfish habits, my cynicism and egotism and lay every decent thing that's in me at your feet." But was it decent to take advantage of the man who worked in Shanghai? He didn't think that it was.

It was true that Christmas was over and that the time for making presents had therefore slipped away, but one night after dinner he took Cary by the elbow and led her in his room. Doris remained at the radio, but although it was a symphony orchestra she never heard a sound. He said in his most cynical manner, "I want you to listen to this. I'm dead against long engagements. They make so many dents. As Christmas is not so far behind I'm going to ask you to accept a present which, if you'd been here, I might have given you then."

"What on earth do you mean?" With the merest suggestion of a stammer he came up to the scratch. "Pocket this envelope, will you? It contains a little check. I want you to buy some frocks with it, book yourself a passage to the man who lives in Shanghai, and, after having had a honeymoon in some romantic place—they're always to be found—settle down and live happily ever after, as I firmly believe you will."

Cary took the envelope and, as it was rather dark, put it to her lips. "You're the only living person," she said, "with the gift of finding the sort of words that are proper to a thing like this."

And when he felt her hand on his arm he trembled in every limb. She was utterly wrong, as it happened. He had lost that gift just then.

"So you think I'm a rotten secretary and you're giving me the push?" "No," he said. "You're an excellent secretary, my dearest Cary, but you'll make a better wife. Then, too, to be perfectly honest, I'm thinking about Miss Minton and her faithful excellence."

"Who's the liar now?"

"I am." He raised her hand to his lips. "But let me give you a tip. Remind the man who lives in Shanghai that, round about Christmas time, a somewhat elderly novelist may do little things like this."

A wireless came from the ship. "God bless you, my dear friend."

Well, three young people were happy—Doris was still quite young, and so was the man in Shanghai—and Balfour, after all, would soon be fifty-one.

Oh, yes, he kept the case.

Negroes Roam Caucasus,

Report From Travelers

Following the recent discovery in the fastnesses of the Altai mountains of a tribe of hitherto unknown hill-men who claim never to have heard of either the World war or the Russian revolution, comes the report that a Soviet expedition has stumbled on a village in the wildest and most remote part of the Caucasus, whose inhabitants are all negroes. It is considered probable that they are the descendants of negro slaves, which the Georgian nobles were in the habit of buying in the slave markets of Stamboul. Their presence in the Caucasus may be due to the fact of one of the ancient galleons having foundered on the shores of the Black sea, some slaves escaping to found the present black colony.—Montreal Herald.

Old Dutch Custom

Among Holland's quaint farming customs is that of baptizing calves before they are sent out to the fields to graze, the idea being that the sprinkling with water will keep the animals away from the ditches which surround the fields.

DECLARES DRUNKEN DRIVING MUST CEASE

E. Raymond Cato, Chief of the California Highway Patrol, has issued the following appeal to automobile drivers:

For several weeks the California Highway Patrol has watched with growing concern the alarming rate of increase of accidents, in which drunken driving was involved, in California.

I am particularly disappointed over the figures because I had felt the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment would not only put an end to intolerable conditions that were breeding crime but would also result in less drinking, particularly among our young people.

It is my belief that these figures do not reflect a permanent condition and that after the first period of celebrating the new found liberties is over, our people will return to normalcy and will be less inclined to drink to excess as the novelty wears off.

Meanwhile, we must face the facts. Reports received by us for January of this year indicate an increase of more than 11 per cent in fatalities involving drunken drivers over January of 1933. February figures appear to indicate an increase that is even greater.

Our figures for the full year of 1933 show an appalling increase. Indeed they show a 40 per cent increase in all types of accidents in which drinking played a part.

We cannot disregard these figures. Therefore I call upon every citizen who believes in the enjoyment of personal liberty to assist us in stamping out this evil.

Unless we do this the very thing we have been fighting for assuredly will be disgraced.

Alcoholic beverages have been enjoyed by mankind for centuries. But our ancestors enjoyed them under different circumstances. There was not one motor vehicle for every 2.5 persons and wonderful highways conducive to fast travel as there now is in California. We must recognize that conditions are different and govern ourselves accordingly.

No man who has been drinking is a safe driver. He may think so, but he is not.

It is the duty of every person who has been drinking intoxicating liquors, or who expects to attend any sort of gathering where excessive quantities of intoxicating liquors are consumed, to refrain from driving. It is also the moral duty of every person to assume responsibility for seeing that his friends do not drive under such circumstances.

The officers of the California Patrol have been instructed to enforce the law rigidly against those apprehended driving while drunk. Such persons need expect no leniency, as our courts have shown a desired inclination to meet out the extreme punishment for drunken driving as required by law.

HELP THROTTLE DEPRESSION

The construction industry has been virtually at the zero point—even below the general industrial level. Its most important branch, home-building, practically disappeared. Last year it shared but little in the business pick-up.

But now the construction index is rising. It isn't going forward at a boom rate, but sound, well-established acceleration is occurring. Much of this is due to governmental building. But private construction is likewise showing a substantial upward trend. Many men have found jobs at good wages—and they are spending an appreciable part of their earnings in improving homes.

An inevitable result is an increase in construction costs. All the basic materials—lumber, cement, roofing, etc.—have made substantial gains over the extraordinary lows. But they're still pretty well down in the economic cellar. They're cheaper at this writing than they will be in the future. And the opportunity to build a home at low cost is still to be had. So far as the home-owner is concerned, building and repairing now is good business—it saves him money, and gives him something essential at bargain prices. And, when he builds, he is contributing substantially toward speeding recovery. He is giving jobs—he is sending needed dollars through a thousand industries—he is stimulating commerce. That's why an excellent motto is: "Build and repair now—save yourself money—and help throttle depression."

SILVER PRECEDED GOLD

Silver was the standard unit of value in America before gold. The Continental Congress adopted as a monetary unit a dollar containing 375.64 grains of pure silver.

Consequently, the present move to remonetize silver can't be called an untried experiment. It is simply designed to put an old economic instrument, which did necessary work well, back on the job again. In doing that, it would bring new life into an industry which has been one of our greatest employers, taxpayers and contributors to prosperity—mining.

Tot Tumbles Two Stories

Apparently unhurt in a fall from a two story window, John Parker, Jr., three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Parker, of Millbrae, is under observation at Community Hospital. The youngster tumbled from a window at his home at night after being undressed for bed. Although his head struck the ground in the fall, he was not apparently hurt, physicians of the hospital said.

Summe: Camp for Boys

The San Mateo county Y. M. C. A. will conduct a camp for older boys this summer. In addition to the two younger boys' camps which have been held at the San Mateo county Memorial Park each year, a camp for high school boys will be held during July.

It is suggested by a noted educator that inasmuch as it is possible for any one to be informed about everything, we should deliberately choose the subjects of which we are content to remain in ignorance. For most of us these would make a quite lengthy list.

A JAPANESE PRINCE

Great rejoicing throughout Japan followed the birth of a son to the emperor and empress a few days ago, which gave the island empire an heir to the throne for which the country had prayed.

The new prince is the fifth child of the young royal couple, the four others, of whom there are three living, being girls. In Japan succession to the throne is confined to the male line, and in the absence of a crown prince the heir-apparent has been the emperor's brother.

If the baby prince lives to succeed his father he will be the one hundred and twenty-fourth emperor of the present dynasty, which claims continuous succession for 2,600 years. He may have to wait quite a while, however, for his father, the present Emperor Hirohito, is only 32 years old. Hirohito, born April 29, 1901, became regent in 1921 because of his father's ill health, and succeeded to the throne upon the latter's death in 1926. His coronation ceremonies, held in Kyoto during a five-day period in November, 1928, was most brilliant, and attended by dignitaries from all over the world.

Because of Japan's aggressive policy in the Far East, the empire is morally in bad repute among the nations just now. Many believe the Japanese attitude may bring another major war. The little crown prince, happily for him, does not know what a turbulent world he has been born into.

FISHY CHURCH FOLKS

Down in Butler county, Alabama, according to the Greenville Advocate, is a colored preacher who has a keen insight into human nature, particularly as applied to sizing up the members of his flock. In a recent sermon he likened various types of church members to certain species of fish, somewhat as follows:

Some, he said, are like trout, always jumping—from one church to another. Others were likened to the sucker—easy to catch, but quick to spoil. Then he mentioned the flounder, which can see only one way—he sees the faults of the preacher, but never sees his own. Another type was compared with the catfish, which hides on the bottom of the creek until a fresher arouses him—the church member who warms up when a revival is going on, but lies dormant at other times. Another type was likened the eel—a slippery, slick fellow, hard to handle. And so on.

While the good colored brother's sermon was a bit droll, it included observations which might appropriately be applied, not only to the peculiarities of church members, but to those of humanity as a whole. Most of us are rather fishy in some respects.

MALARIA VS. PARESIS

If we could only discover it, there may be, as Jacques declares in "As You Like It," some "good in everything." It is unquestionably true that much that is good and useful has been found in most unexpected quarters. For example, in malaria germs.

For quite a while experiments have been made which have tended to show that the germs of malaria retard the progress of paresis, or partial paralysis.

A report of cases made by Dr. Edward Gillispie, assistant at Binghampton, N. Y., states that more than one-third of the patients suffering from paresis at that institution during recent months have been so improved by the injection of malaria germs into their blood that they have been permitted to go to their homes.

Dr. Gillispie does not claim that his treatment can be relied upon as a cure, but among the cases treated all but one-third have shown a favorable response. This is a most hopeful indication of the progress toward control of one of the most dreaded diseases which menaces mankind.

The idea of setting one disease to fight another is fascinating, and may have great possibilities as applied to therapeutics of the future.

Having the right of way doesn't help much when the other driver is a fool.

We might as well "give the devil his due." He will probably take it anyway.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

It is better to be a live one in a live city than a dead one in a dead city.

A lot of people seem incapable of mentally embracing anything beyond what they see under their noses.

There is no substitute for work. There is no business that can succeed without work and advertising. Even a man with millions must work—he must work to keep it.

Everybody knows that the world is overburdened with debts and taxes, and the chief reason for these weights of burden are the fall in prices since the debts were contracted and the unreasonable, unjust and unexplainable increase in taxes. Some of our politicians should quit chasing rainbows and help to reduce taxes instead of increasing them. That would be a step forward toward recovery.

Many cities need team-thinking and team-working.

It is advertised merchandises that sells the best and, even more to the point, advertising sells goods.

With their recent experiences fresh in their minds, can the bankers be blamed if they exhibit a caution which formerly did not occur to them?

Some people want to know what they can do for their home city. One thing they can do that won't cost them anything is to boost it.

Automobiles are constantly being made easier and more pleasant to drive. They will also go faster. But the most important thing about an automobile is the intelligence of the driver behind the wheel.

THEY'RE NOT SPEAKING NOW

"So you and those neighbors are not on speaking terms any longer?"

"No. All diplomatic relations have been suspended."

"How did that come about?"

"He sent me a box of axle grease and told me to use some of it on my lawn-mower when I started at 6 in the morning."

"Well? What then?"

"Then I sent it back and told him to use some of it on his daughter's voice when she was singing at 11 o'clock at night."

Next time we go to war it should be to make America safe for Americans.
